PHOENIX

This abstract art piece was created using 22 carefully selected bark fragments, painted with a glossy black finish reminiscent of the well-known Japanese charred wood technique called Yakisugi.

It represents only the first part of a story of metamorphosis.

Indeed, these 22 pieces of tree bark carry within them a purifying dimension, recalling the myth of the PHOENIX, the mythical fiery creature that embodies both creative and destructive forces, and can rise from its ashes.

This notion of rebirth does not mean that we forget our past, but rather that we are ready to embrace a profound transformation of our identity.

It is a celebration of the inner strength that guides us, and refuses to be defeated by life's challenges.

Each of our scars becomes a star that will guide us on the path of our metamorphosis.
